

MOH-KINS-TSIS 2019 CONFERENCE

PROGRAM STREAMS

Would you like your presentation to be considered for one of our Featured Streams? If so, please choose which stream:

Evolving Perspectives on Campus Mental Health

Mental health initiatives across Canadian campuses have undergone a paradigm shift over the past decade. Changing student needs have resulted in a re-think in the ways in which we develop policies and frameworks and deliver programs and services to support student and campus well-being. Over the past decade, campuses have increasingly adopted a health promotion perspective to create healthier campuses to support mental health and wellbeing (e.g., resilience, peer support, skill-building approaches). Campuses have also undergone a paradigm shift in downstream programming, including new service delivery models, use of technology, program evaluation, and community partnerships. This program stream will explore the successes, challenges, and current state of mental health and wellbeing initiatives on Canadian campuses and for presenters to share emerging and best practices.

Senior Leaders

The purpose of the senior stream is to identify concurrent sessions that may be of particular interest to senior leaders. The content in these sessions may be delivered by researchers, faculty members, senior staff, or senior student affairs officers. The content delivered in these sessions is likely to address advanced competencies for senior leaders. Some sessions will be open to all conference participants, and some will be restricted to senior leaders.

Indigenous Cultural Competency/Awareness

Sessions in this stream will build knowledge, enhanced self-awareness, and skills that enable professionals to work respectfully and effectively with Indigenous students. Sessions considered for this stream must be collaborative and inclusive of Indigenous presenters.

Subject-matter Streams will be curated once the review of your proposal has been completed. You may be contacted to confirm your interest in being included in the Stream. Streams are identified as priority areas for CACUSS. Communities of Practice may also curate other subject-matter streams. If your session meets the minimum requirement of the Program Review Process, but is not included in the stream, it may still be included in the general program.

Timelines/Process

- All proposals to be considered for a Featured Stream at the CACUSS Conference MUST be submitted via the regular Call for Proposal Process.
- Submissions will be peer reviewed through our masked reviewer process.
- Submissions which meet the criteria for proposals that are indicated to be considered for part of the stream will be extracted.
- Those proposals will then be reviewed by a separate review team and a final list of sessions to be included in the stream will be presented.
- A review of all other submissions within a similar subject area will also be conducted to see if there are additional sessions that might be appropriate to be considered as part of the stream.
- Presenters will be contacted to confirm their interest/intention at being in the Stream.
- Stream will be listed and promoted via the program, app, and other channels.
